CLASS POEM

Phantom of life, master of all,
The painful time has come to call
The bearer of eternity, proud or meek—
Our laden future now to speak.

The tides of life are grim and cold
While numberless men, young and old,
Clamor its chaff, night and day,
The weak and strong the selfsame way.

Each cast on a huge wave of fate,
Doomed to die either early or late,
With a gift of life, queer or frail,
To use at will to any avail.

The gift of life is never success,
Be it long or short at its best ;
The will of thought and well trained hand
Is the cost and price to be a man.

—EUGENE D. BROWN.
