Faculty Institute Opens Spring Semester

Rededication, accountability and greater interdisciplinary cooperation were themes addressed during the Spring Semester Faculty Institute held January 3 on the Downtown Campus.

Following greetings and brief comments by Dr. Helen Houston, chairman of the Faculty Senate, and vice presidents Barbara Murrell, James Farrell, Calvin Atchison and Ron Dickson, the assembly heard comments from Dr. Robert McElrath, commissioner of the Tennessee Department of Education, TSU President Frederick Humphries and Dr. Peter Consacro, assistant vice chancellor, State Board of Regents.

Observing that the south is leading the country in education reform, McElrath said the reform is being fueled by the public's demand for accountability from the public school system. He continued by outlining plans which have been developed to improve education in Tennessee.

"During the next three years, the administration has proposed that $1 billion be added to education in the state," McElrath said. "There is a proposed 60%-40% distribution of dollars between state higher education and K-12 schools."

The plan for improving education in Tennessee includes the basic skills first program, more math and science requirements, improved vocational education, alternative schools for disruptive children, programs for gifted children, providing computer education and equipment to elementary schools and the "master" or "distinguished" teacher plan.

McElrath also suggested ways the State Department of Education and higher education institutions can work together.

"We must get together to define areas where higher education can assist in in-service training for public schools," he said. "I would like to establish a visitation/exchange day where public school teachers come to your campus to teach a class and a faculty member goes out to teach a high school or elementary school class."

He also suggested establishing a cooperative relationship to help identify and recruit outstanding students to become teachers and to help share professional research with the public school system.

Humphries began his address by expressing his hope that the faculty had resolved to continue its pursuit of excellence and commitment to teaching TSU students. In reflecting on 1983, Humphries said it had been a "significant year for education in the country, the state and for TSU."

"We saw the publication of several reports on education in our country," Humphries said. "It is clear that we need to make changes if we are to be responsive to the needs of the future."

Humphries went on to report the progress which has been made on projects he announced to the Institute last fall.

"We are only a few weeks away from cementing the project with TVA for the craft upgrade center in the Cockrill Bend area," he said. "The aviation center plans may be finalized by then too."

Plans for the business incubation center on the Downtown Campus are very close to fruition as well as a cooperative program with the University of Arizona on international relations, Humphries said.

"We have developed a proposal which will result in the offering of a doctorate in criminal justice," he continued. "A master's program in nursing is being worked on and a master's in public history is being explored."

Humphries announced to the faculty that a raise would be given this month to all employees. "It's not

Authors Help Broaden Their Academic Disciplines

Four Tennessee State University educators have written books that are said to widen current areas of information in their academic disciplines.

The authors and their book titles are Carol Barach, who wrote a parent's guide to speech problems, titled Help Me Say It; Michael C. Moore and Lynda J. Moore, a husband-wife team, who wrote, The Complete Handbook of Holistic Health and Dr. Millicent Lownes, authored a step-by-step guide designed to assist women in establishing a business under the title, So You Think You Want To Start A Business.

Barach, assistant professor of speech pathology and audiology, is also a clinical supervisor at the TSU speech, hearing and language development center, the clinic associated with the Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology.

Holder of B.A. degree in speech pathology from Vassar College and the M.A. degree from Vanderbilt

How did she come to write the book?

Gift Solicitation Policy Revised

The policy on the solicitation and acceptance of gifts has been revised and accepted by the State Board of Regents.

The revised policy is different from the previous policy in that the procedure for accepting gifts is more detailed and the responsibilities of the Board of Regents, President and Vice President for Development are more clearly explained, said Dr. Calvin Atchison, vice president for development and research.

"The new policy involves anyone who goes out to solicit gifts in the name of Tennessee State University," Atchison said. "This includes all employees, alumni groups and booster clubs. Everyone on campus needs to become familiar with this policy."

The revised policy follows in its entirety.

News In Brief

The Department of Home Economics at Tennessee State University has been granted continued accreditation for a period of 10 years from the Council for Professional Development of the American Home Economics Association. Kinsley B. Green, executive director of the Council, congratulated TSU on the "quality" of the home economics unit and cited the size of the department's enrollment and the faculty's expertise and commitment to research as key strengths.

Tennessee State University has received a $10,000 anonymous gift for the Robert Lee Myers Memorial Scholarship Fund. The fund was established for the partially blind TSU graduate who received his bachelor of science degree in music education in 1970. The scholarship is designed to help students from the Putnam County area.

Fifty-three students from Tennessee State University have been selected as national leaders to be included in the 1984 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. The nominations were based upon academic achievement, service to the community and leadership in extra-curricular activities as well as potential for continued success. More than 1,500 institutions of higher learning are represented in Who's Who, which was first published in 1934.

McCord Hall Renovation Completed

Major renovations of McCord Hall have been completed for the Department of Biological Sciences at a cost of approximately $1 million. Dr. E. L. Risby, head of the department, said the much needed expansion and modernization is a culmination of faculty efforts over the past 10 years.

The renovated facility contains six lecture rooms, six teaching rooms, six teaching laboratories, five prep rooms, an audio-visual self-study room, 12 faculty offices, a conference room, faculty lounge and a student lounge area.

"The facility will impact in many positive ways on student recruitment and training within the department," Risby said. "The building will be furnished and fully functional for the spring semester."

Risby praised his faculty and students for the understanding and tolerance they demonstrated during the delayed renovation.

"A less talented and committed faculty might have become disillusioned, but ours faltered not and are to be commended for a job done under very adverse conditions," he said.

Extensive renovation of Harned Hall is also underway and is scheduled for completion by March 1984. The "Biology Building" will offer additional teaching and research training capabilities for students and faculty.

offer of a gift or donation. After securing all appropriate information, a recommendation shall be submitted to the President who will make a final decision on acceptance of the proposed gift or donation.

Solicitation of Gifts

1. The Vice President for Research and Development has the authority to approve and conduct all activities for the purpose of soliciting gifts to the University. 2. All requests or proposals soliciting gifts must be approved by the Vice President for Research and Development and a record of such request must be on file in that office.

3. Any person who gains knowledge of the probability of the offer of a gift or donation to the University should advise his department or activity head. The department or activity head should secure the following listed information (if applicable) concerning the potential gift/donation: a. Identification of the item(s) and donor. b. Estimate of the value of the item(s)—preferably based on the judgement of the department head or other responsible department official. This statement is for internal use only and cannot be considered official for donor's tax purposes. NOTE: Professional appraisals of value of non-cash items (for tax purposes) will normally be the responsibility of the donor; however, other arrangements may be made at the discretion of the Director of Development; c. Restrictions on use of the gift; d. Recommendation as to acceptance; e. Statement as to the University's need for the item(s), if non-cash; f. Statement as to the condition of the item(s); g. Statement as to availability of space for use of the item(s); h. Details on any liabilities associated with the gift, i.e. mortgages or liens; i. Estimate of cost of renovation, if necessary, to make the gift usable; j. Estimate of the annual maintenance cost and other on-going expenses, if accepted; k. Estimate of cost of delivery and/or installation; l. Estimate of all other costs which might be incurred by acceptance of the item(s).

For all gifts other than cash, departments or units shall submit the above information to the appropriate Vice President for consideration and recommendation to the Vice President for Research and Development. Cash donations with significant restrictions on use (other than contributions to established restricted accounts) shall also be reviewed in the same manner as non-cash gifts.

Acceptance of Gifts

Unless otherwise stipulated as in the State Board of Regents Policy the President or his designee may accept gifts and donations on behalf of the University. The following exceptions are noted: 1. Only the Board may accept a gift if Board acceptance is a condition set by the donor; 2. Only the Chancellor and Board may accept gifts of real property, and title must be conveyed to the Board on behalf of the institution/school; 3. Gifts of data processing equipment, software, and services, as defined by System guidelines, must be approved by the Chancellor; 4. Gifts with conditions that require a one-time or long-term commitment of institutional/school resources valued in excess of $75,000 must be approved by the Chancellor prior to the acceptance; 5. Gifts with conditions that ultimately will require consideration by the Board or Chancellor must be approved by the Chancellor prior to acceptance (e.g., gifts to support the initiation of a new academic program or capital improvement project); and 6. Gifts of property subject to an indebtedness must be approved by the Chancellor prior to acceptance; 7. The President may recommend approval by the Chancellor prior to acceptance of any gift.

The President authorizes the Vice President for Research and Development to accept restricted gifts that have been properly solicited subject to confirmation by him. Unsolicited restricted gifts must be accepted by the President. Unrestricted gifts are accepted by the President only.

Corporate stock given to the University will be accepted and disposed of according to State Board of Regents policy. The Vice President for Business and Fiscal Affairs, in consultation with the President, is responsible for the proper implementation of that policy. Upon receipt of an offer of a gift/donation, the required information concerning the item(s) and recommendation from the appropriate Vice President, as appropriate, the Vice President for Research and Development will accomplish the following:

1. Review thoroughly the information submitted by the department/activity head;
2. Secure the approval of the President;
3. Review the gift/donation proposal with the prospective donor, and advise the donor of the non-acceptance and the reasons therefore; or the terms and conditions under which the gift/donations will be accepted;
4. Advise the concerned department of the decision to accept or not accept the gift or donation;
5. Coordinate the transfer of ownership and physical possession of the item(s) with the donor and the appropriate University department officials; including necessary steps to have the item(s) placed on the current inventory;
6. Advise the offices of the following listed officials of the acceptance of the gift or donation. Non-cash items should be fully described and the terms and conditions under which the acceptance was made should be included: a. Vice President for Business and Finance; b. Director of Purchasing; c. Other department chairmen or activity heads who may be concerned.

Records and Reporting

A complete record of all gifts and donations to the University will be maintained in the Office of Development.

Proper acknowledgement of all gifts and donations will be made by the Vice President for Research and Development. He will also insure that all letters and publicity concerning gifts and donations are appropriately coordinated prior to release.

An annual report of all gifts will be submitted to the State Board of Regents as prescribed by the Chancellor. A summary of all gifts will be included in the President's annual report to the State Board of Regents. The Tennessee State University Foundation

1. The Vice President for Research and Development will maintain separate records for gifts made to the University and those made to the Foundation.

2. Gifts made to the University will be accepted and acknowledged accordingly. Likewise, gifts made to the Foundation will be accepted and acknowledged accordingly.

3. Foundation gifts will be reported as part of the institution report when submitted.

interested in writing a book," Barach said.

"He contacted me and here I am" (with completed book), she said.

Barach, whose book has been praised by Dr. Lendon H. Smith, author, physician and surgeon, noted that the TSU clinic is run by students. "I help to coordinate that program. It is the most rewarding and interesting part of the program at TSU," she said.

Help Me Say It is published by Prentice Hall.

The Moore book deals with a subject and discipline not too popularly known. What is Holistic Health? Lynda Moore was asked in an interview.

"Holistic Health," she explained, is the treatment of the whole spirit, mind, body, and emotions. . . (It) doesn't treat just physical illness but tries to find the underlying cause," she said.

Moore and her husband have conducted many college workshops on holistic health which have focused on nutrition, exercise, meditation, attitudes, and convictions. An attribute of holistic health is that the patient becomes a student involved in the treatment of the disease and shares responsibility in treatment, she said.

Michael Moore, project director, Urban/Rural Differences in Psychiatric Impairment, said his favorite holistic health method mentioned in the book is the native American healers "because they left their culture in their healing and celebrate well-being."

Their book, published by Prentice-Hall, was reviewed Oct. 16 in the Sunday Bookcase of The Nashville Tennessean. Charles Hunt, the reviewer, credits the Moores with

"presenting clear and explicit definitions. . ."

Lownes, a TSU educator for eight years, said she wrote her book "because of a lack of information and literature in the field concerning female entrepreneurship."

She said the book addresses the "concerns facing women who want to start a business." She said the book's intent also is to lend support and encouragement to women and to help women realize their skills and abilities.

Lownes, a well-known authority in the field of small business, received the M.B.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Vanderbilt University. Extensive research has been conducted by Lownes in the areas of female entrepreneurial concerns, women in management, small business development, human capital theory, minorities in business, and other business related areas.

"I really wanted to share (by doing the book) with other women," Lownes said, explaining that "a woman has to prove herself and establish her own credit."

going to be a big raise, it's going to be a piddling raise—but I figure something is better than nothing," he said. "I intend to give the largest raise we can muster in July."

The president concluded his address by saying there is a big job to be done and reiterating his wish that the faculty continue its commitment to students.

Dr. Consacro discussed the THEC evaluation program and comp-test which are administered at all Board of Regents institutions.

"People want accountability," he said. "Several years ago the state legislature began to require evaluation of programs and geared funding toward performance."

Currently, 5 percent of each institution's budget is tied to the performance evaluation, Consacro said. He then explained the five indicators which are used to judge the quality of education and intellectual life on campus.

The indicators are: accreditation status of programs; how well students score on standardized tests such as the Graduate Record Exam and National Teachers Exam; how well prepared students are to go out into the world, a measurement obtained through the ACT Comp Test; what former students think about the education they received, and plans that are developed to improve as an institution.

Noting that TSU received an 87 percent rating on the most recent performance evaluation, Consacro said the process was initiated because "we have to find ways to measure what we do and use those measurements to analyze what we need to do to improve."
