VOL III Nashville 8, Tennessee, April 8, 1946 No 29

The problems confronting the teacher increase in difficulty as civilization advances. But I am not discouraged. From its inception the universal school has always been a challenge to our profession. The challenge increases in intensity as universality climbs up the age-scale. The situation now reflects a degree of difficulty and complexity that should stimulate the interest and the efforts of the most competent members of each generation.

-- William C Bagley, in A Century of the Universal School
